Preface

This is the first book of a series of which I have no plans how many volumes there are going to be. Voronoi (Georges Fedosevich, 1868–1908) planned to write five papers to apply Hermite’s (Charles, 1822–1901) theories to the theory of quadratic forms, he saw only two came out in print. Beethoven (Ludwig van, 1770–1827) obviously wanted to compose symphonies past one-digit number. But that was not to be, for his last one was the ninth with chorus, which came out in 1824. Mahler (Gustav, 1860–1911) tried his best to avoid the fate of Beethoven, yet his tenth symphony had to be finished by Mikorey after the year he died.

My purpose here is merely to explore everything there is to know about founts, or fonts. My interest in them began after I had turned my back on Latex and started to use T_EX. When you use T_EX you need to know about glue and box, and then you can not help become fascinated with fount and typeface.

I have written and published a few books, but this is the first one the purpose of which is for the virtual community of the Internet. I think that is where our future lies, Space and the Internet. I plan to gradually make this book available for free, to be used for reference. Such reference is handy when you want to choose an uncommon fount to fit your purpose.

Fount history

Around 1440 when Gutenberg (Johannes Gensfleisch) invented the movable types one group of fount already dominated the western world. Collectively known as ‘Gothic’ it comprises several major founts, for example Bastarda, Fraktur, Humanistic Minuscule, Rotunda, Textura and Schwabacher. Textura, the first of Gothic founts, was developed in France in the ø[13:th] century. It was widely used in Bohemia, England, France, Germany, the Netherlands and Spain.

Humanistic Minuscule was developed in Florence by the humanists. Also developed in Italy was Rotunda during the ø[15:th] century. In Germany Schwabacher was developed in 1481. It was used in Martin Luther’s bible.

Fraktur fount was developed in the ø[16:th] century by Leonhard Wagner by the order of Maximilian (German emperor, 1493–1519). It was also known as German Black or Deutsche Schrift.

Futura was designed by Paul Renner in 1927 as a geometric sanserif. Copyrighted as a work of art, it has been used by Volkswagen since 1960s.

History of computer founts[†] began with stick fonts by CalComp during 1960s. These use line segments to approximate characters. Late 1960s saw fonts designed based on more line segments by Alan Hersley at Naval Weapons Research Laboratory, for example Hersley duplex.

Courier was designed in 1955 by Howard Kettler for IBM. It is a fixed-pitch fount, that is all characters have the same width.

Helvetica is a sanserif fount that came into being in Switzerland in 1957 as Neue Haas Grotesk by Max Miedinger and Eduard Hoffmann. The name was changed into Helvetica in 1960 because ‘Helvetia’ is a Latin word for ‘Switzerland’. Swiss style of graphics was popular during 1950s and 1960s. Akzidenz Grotesk was a widely used fount created by Josef Muller Brockmann in 1896.

Helvetica is used by Apple. Other founts similar to or imitating Helvetica are Monotype’s Arial (1982) that is used by Micro Soft, and Linotype (1983).

Founts used in early computer displays bit-mapped founts, also known as native founts. These are not scalable. Outline founts which use a combination of straight lines and arcs began as shaded founts in 1977 bu ISSCO in San Diego.

Adobe Systems created during 1980s Post Script, which was then used on Macintosh. It also created Type 1 founts which use Bezier curves. Type 1 founts are outline founts simplification of Post Script language.

Because Adobe charged high licence for Type 1, Apple in 1991 created its own True Type which uses quadratic curves instead of the cubic Bezier curves. Also, Type's 3–9 founts are cheaper implementations of Type 1.

[†] cf Encyclopedia of Computers and Computer History, Raúl Rajas, Ed., 2001

Donald Knuth (b. 1938), the creator of \TeX and Meta Fonts, extended Adobe's ideas of Type 1 founts in such a way that a single fount contains algorithms sufficient to define an entire family of founts. His idea in turn was adopted by Adobe in 1990s.

The founts of various styles shown here in this book are listed in order according to the name of their files as adopted by T_EX. I think these names provide a good indexing system which suits practical needs in computing. Interested readers may locate their location on the tree by, for instance, using the Unix command `[find]`. For example, if you want to know where to find `[black]` you can type the following.

cd /
find ./ -name black.tfm

The result when I did this on my computer is this.

./usr/share/texmf/fonts/tfm/public/misc/black.tfm
